7. Brief description:

The National Farmers Day also known as Kisan Din is celebrated every year on 23rd December, on the birth anniversary of the 5th Prime Minister of India, Choudhary Charan Singh, also a farmer's leader, who introduced many policies to improve the lives of the Indian farmers. The Kisan Din celebration, which sought to recognize and value the contributions of farmers to our community, was a lively and educational occasion. Vivekanand College's botany department hosted the event in the village of Herle, Tal: Hatkangale, Dist: Kolhapur. A variety of topics pertaining to farming, sustainable methods, and rural development were covered by the gathering of students, instructors, and agricultural enthusiasts. In order to improve crop management and boost production, farmers gained knowledge of the most recent technology developments in agriculture and farming. By commemorating Kisan Din, the Botany department demonstrated its dedication to raising awareness of sustainable practices and agriculture.

8. Outcomes: (whether the aim achieved):

1. Awareness and appreciation

- The occasion brought attention to how important farmers to our society
- Attendees developed a greater respect for farmer's labor and contributions.
- The occasion brought attention to the vital role that farmers play in our society
- Those in attendance developed a greater respect for farmer's labor and contribution

2. Knowledge Exchange

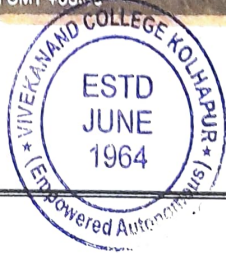

- Eminent agricultural experts delivered lectures, sharing insights on organic farming, soil health and crop diversification.
- Students actively participated, engaging in discussions and learning from experts.

3. Interaction with Farmers

- Students had the opportunity to interact with local farmers.
- These interactions allowed students to learn about real-world experiences, challenges and success stories.

Through these outcomes, the event successfully honored farmers, promoted agricultural awareness, and emphasized sustainable practices. Vivekanand college's active involvement showcased its commitment to holistic education and community engagement.
