Neo-liberal Reforms and Welfare in India

Organized by

Departments of Economics and Political Science

Saturday, 30th April, 2022

Report of the Seminar

The Departments of Economics and Political Science jointly organized ICSSR sponsored one day national seminar on 'Neoliberal Reforms and Welfare in India' on Saturday, 30th April, 2022 from 10:30 AM to 5:00 PM in the Library Hall Auditorium of the college.

Rationale: India formally inaugurated neoliberal reforms in its economy in 1991. Liberalization of economy in India has persisted steadily but sluggishly. Neo-liberal policies and integration with the world economy have affected social and political life in India variously and deeply. The social welfare becomes an all the more important aspect of policy and politics when at the same time liberalization is equated with decline of the welfare state.

Objectives:

- 1) To probe into the nature of neo-liberal reforms in India.
- 2) To analyze the impact of neo-liberal reformson the lives of citizens.
- 3) To contribute to the public discourse on neo-liberal economic policy and the welfare role of the State

The Theme of the Seminar:

India formally inaugurated neoliberal reforms in its economy in 1991. Liberalization of economy in India has persisted steadily but sluggishly. Neo-liberal policies and integration with the world economy have affected social and political life in India variously and deeply. Turn toward markets and corporatization affects the life conditions of workers as citizenry. The welfare function of the State provides the necessary cushion in the economic and social transformation that takes place with liberalization. The social welfare becomes an all the more important aspect of policy and politics when at the same time liberalization is equated with decline of the welfare state. In this context, it becomes necessary to probe into the nature of neo-liberal reforms in India, their impact and the nature, content and impact on the lives of citizens.

The seminar aims to contribute to the public discourse on neo-liberal economic policy and the welfare role of the State in the context of their interaction and inter-relation. This is an attempt to substantiate the inter-disciplinary dimension of this issue. Though its independence is valued, economic policy cannot separate itself from social and political accountability and on the other hand, too much politicization of welfare policies creates challenges for economy and democracy. The seminar aims to throw light on the possibility of rational and socially accountable balance in economic and social policy of the State in the context of neo-liberalism.

The turn toward liberalization in the 1980s has been explained variously, including in terms of the changes in coalition of the dominant classes, that is changing nature of the social character of the State. Neo-liberal reforms do not pertain only to economic policies but imply changes in the organization and functioning of State institutions to align them to market rationality (Joseph 2007). The problems faced by developmental state in the world and India created legitimacy for the neo-liberal reforms in the economic sector. On the other hand, democracy is believed to be linked to the welfare demands which create pressure of the resource capacity of the state.
